CANDY TO THE RESCUE

EMILY APPLEBY was to be the lecturer at the Hartwick Women's Club on Friday! But because of a few days' layover in her schedule, she had arrived on Wednesday! And because Candy's mother was chairman of the entertainment committee, it had fallen her lot to take the woman into their home as a guest! Maybe it was a good thing!

The topic of her speech was to be "Today's Problems with Teen-Agers" and Candy put her ear close to the door to listen as this rather aged authority on youthful behavior spouted her theories to Mr. and Mrs. O'Connor, Candy's mother and dad!

"The trouble with young people today," Miss Appleby was explaining, "is that they have been too pampered! They don't know how to do things for themselves! Take entertainment, for instance! We had taffy pulls and picnics and hayrides in my day, which took planning! Now they ask for money to see a movie or they go to some awful soda shop to dance to a juke box or they watch television!"

Candy grinned to herself as she heard her dad say, "What's awful about a soda shop and what's wrong with television?"

"They should be taught resourcefulness," continued the lecturer! "Girls used to know how to cook! Now they simply open cans! Boys in my day walked or rode a horse to see the girls they were courting! Now they have these rattling jalopies! I'm out to convert our children back to the old-fashioned ways of doing things! And I expect to make it plain to the parents of Hartwick that it's important!"

"Maybe you're right," Candy heard her mother say! "Maybe children are given too many easy ways these days!"

"Horrors!" thought Candy! "If mom falls for that line, so will every other mother!" She dashed out the door and found Ted and related to him all that she had heard!

"That gives me a pain," said Ted. "What does she know about our problems?"

"The point is," Candy explained, "that she's a pretty convincing talker! We have to work fast or we'll be back in the horse and buggy days! I have a plan!"

Candy and Ted hurried to the Sweet Shoppe and got the gang together! And Candy presented her idea! It turned out that Trish knew a man who had a hayrack and team of horses! Orville's dad owned a hunting lodge in the country with few accommodations and only a wood range to cook on! They all agreed to bring food to be prepared—noting out of cans! There would be no cars, no player with records for dancing! No fun but they were fighting for their rights!

"I hope this works," Candy said as she and Ted entered her house! "Cross X!"

Candy had been chosen as spokesman! She entered the living room ahead of Ted and smiled as she spoke to Miss Appleby! "I know that your interest is in teen-agers," she said innocently! "Our crowd is planning a party for tomorrow night and we thought you might like to come along!"

She heard her dad catch his breath and mutter, "Is Candy crazy?" But he grinned broadly the next evening when he saw the group come up in a horse drawn hayrack and help Emily Appleby over the high backboard and into the box and the hay!

It was a rough ride! Orville saw to that by sitting on the driver's seat next to Ted who handled the horses! Orville used his pea shooter to throw the animals into a gallop! And the kids hung on behind and watched Miss Appleby wince and turn pale as they joggled over the rough road to the country place picked for their party!

Candy and Tina helped her inside because of her weak knees! They put her in a chair beside the stove while the boys brought in wood to build a fire! She sat there shivering and complaining about being hungry!

"I'm sorry," said Candy. "But it will be a while before we eat! The fire has to be good before we can cook meat and potatoes and bake biscuits!"

Then the unexpected happened! The stove blew up while the girls were cooking and the soot covered Miss Appleby who was huddled close to keep warm! She was black all over and coughing and demanding to go home!

"Didn't somebody bring a car?" she asked, choking!

"No," answered Candy! "We live like old-fashioned folks, you see!"

"Then call a taxi for me," stormed the old lady!

"We can't," Candy explained! "There's no telephone here!"

But they put out the fire and packed up the half-cooked food and started for home again in the hayrack! This time, Candy sat on the driver's seat beside Ted while Miss Appleby, the woman who had urged a revival of the good old days, huddled in the hay to keep warm!

"You did it, dream gal," grinned Ted! "You came to our rescue! Bet she changes her tune after this!"

"At least," giggled Candy, "I'll bet she won't turn down a bowl of hot CANNED soup!"

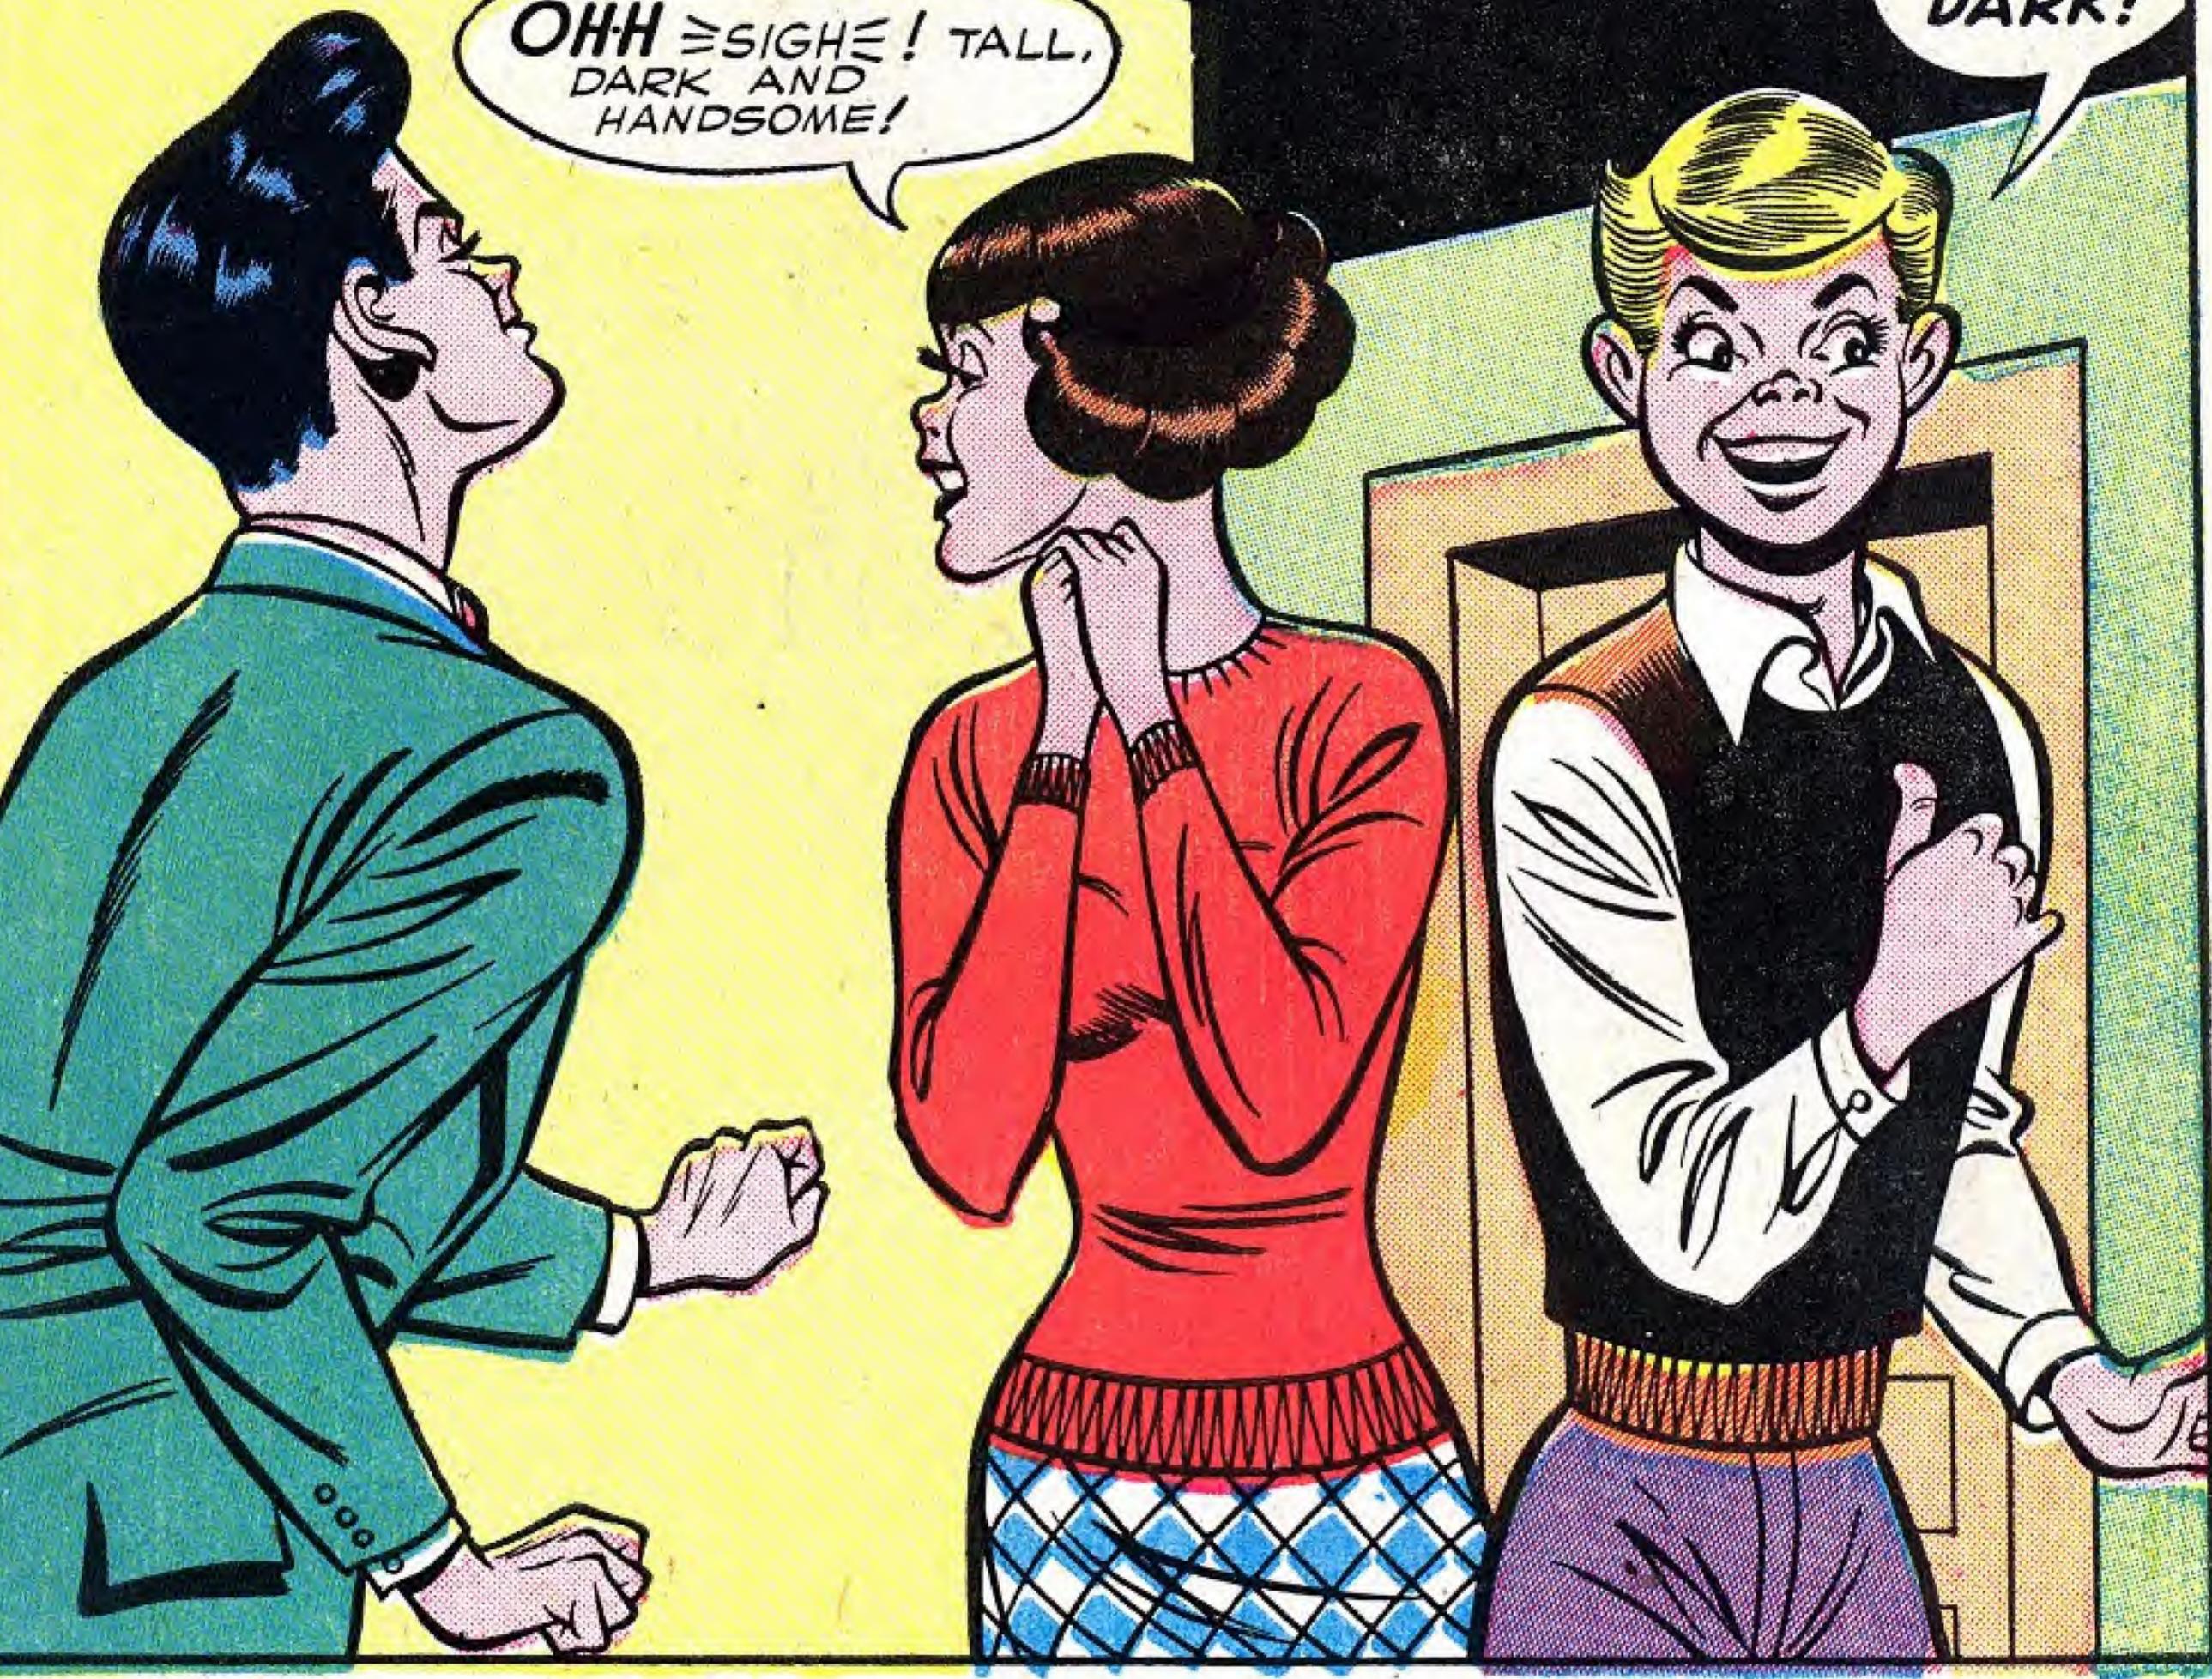

Later that night, Emily Appleby sat up in bed, re-writing her lecture! And on Friday, at the Women's Club, she advised that modern ways were best for modern youth!
